Customer Reviews

This is the just the best cookbook I have in my large collection. I prize this as highly as my Keith Floyd books. M.F.K. Fisher brings authentic French recipes to life in an easy to follow way that are still relevant and mouth-watering. She acquired her knowledge of French cooking whilst living in the South of France and in this book, Julia Childs was brought in as a consultant. The book was created in 1968 and the photography within the book is fantastic; it shows the French sourcing and enjoying their provisions in a typical French way of life that is sadly missing from today's society. My favourite photo has to be of a boy eating with delight and the caption reads: "Four-year-old Jean-Baptiste Goethals, on a Sunday picnic, bites into a snack with a snap to it: buttered bread topped with radishes. The open-faced radish sandwich is an acquired taste - best acquired at an early age." Yum! If you are serious about gastronomy you need to have a copy of this cookbook. I cannot look at this book without getting hungry.

Between MFK Fisher and Julia Child, I can't go wrong. I love this vintage edition of the Time/Life series and have it among the few go-to books in a large collection of lesser-used cookbooks. I've read and enjoyed many of Fisher's books, and this old-but-new-to-me hard-bound copy is wonderful to have. Like Child, Fisher believed in simple preparation of fresh, simple ingredients.

This book is part of a collection from the 1970's of Time Life-Foods of the World. This is the handbook which contains all the recipes from the larger hardback book.

I looked forward to this book with much anticipation being a huge fan of the author MFK Fisher. Unfortunately, the binding was cracked and had separated from the book covers. I don't understand why the seller would have sold a book in such poor condition.

I did not receive the Cooking of Provence hardback book that I ordered. I received 4 spiral bound recipe books instead. These were companion books to the original series of Time-Life books that featured the cuisines of various countries and regions.
